News and Notes from the Pastor’s Desk

A few weeks ago, the Supreme Court ruled on an important case involving Hobby Lobby and other businesses. Those businesses were trying to have their religious liberties protected because the new health care law (aka, “Obamacare”) would have forced these business owners to pay for contraceptives and pills that can cause abortions. The Supreme Court, by a very narrow margin, ruled to protect these business owners. With this decision came a lot of misconceptions.

The biggest complaint I heard about this decision was that it would hurt the health of women. This view tends to see pregnancy as a disease. To say that women need free access to contraceptives and pills that could cause abortion or women’s health would be compromised is misleading. When I think of health problems, I think of diseases, such as cancer. Pregnancy is not a disease. Pregnancy is not like a disease that makes the body work wrong. Instead, pregnancy is something natural and healthy. So to say that protecting women from pregnancy is a “health issue” is misleading and treats pregnancy like a disease.

Another issue that opponents of this ruling have is that it seems to give employers the right to tell women what health options are available to them. Once again, this is not true and is misleading. This ruling only said that employers would not have to pay for things that are against their religious beliefs. Women who work for these companies can get contraceptives at almost any drug store or pharmacy. Plus, this ruling does not stop the government from providing these services for free if they wish. It only stops companies from being forced to pay for them for religious reasons.

Is the battle over religious liberty and the new health care law over? No. In the court system, cases are still coming forward. Catholic institutions are still going to be forced to pay for contraceptives and pills that can cause abortions to their employees, against the teachings of the Church. Parishes and schools, like St. Mary’s, are currently protected. Organizations like Catholic hospitals, Catholic Charities, and Catholic universities are not protected.

Continue to pray that no person or institution may be forced to go against the base beliefs and that religious liberty will be protected in our country and around the world.

Mary, patroness of our parish, pray for us.
